

Teens for Life

Depression has reached epidemic proportions among youth. In the United States, nearly 5,000 young people die from suicide each year. In California, suicide is the third leading cause of death in persons between the ages of 15 and 24. Since 1966, Crisis Support services has reached out into the community to help ease this devastating crisis.

The Teens for Life Program speaks to more than 12,000 youth in their schools each year. Along with providing information about depression and suicidal warning signs, they also encourage help-seeking behavior not only for the teens themselves, but also on behalf of others. Through their presence in a classroom, Teens for Life combats the stigma of silence and opens up the opportunity for students to approach an adult and reach out for help. Crisis Support's Teens For Life program offers an immediate bridge from the student to vital resources, including our 24-hour Crisis Line.

Thanks to the generosity of the Babcock family and the support of their friends and community, 100% of the proceeds from the event sustain this life-saving program.
